"The Mystery of the Maverick" has

Many Honolulans have been wondering what was behind the visit of the Maverick to Hilo some months ago, her later voyage to Batavia, and what was the connection between the Maverick and the schooner Annie Larsen, which put into Grays Harbor, Wash... in distress. Now the mystery is straightened out in tales told by members of the Maverick's crew who recently passed through Honolulu on their way to San Francisco. These steries correspond pretty well with what the local papers learned at the time but could not entirely confirm. The Maverick was to have met the Annie Larsen off Lower California, from the schooner, and proceed to will have to follow certain foutes. Tales of how contrary winds blowug on the coast of California upset a scheme to cause a native uprising in India were brought to Honolulu and San Francisco by nine members of the Maverick, former Jebsen steamer, arriving on the Selyo Maru from Hongkong. The Maverick is still in the harbor of Batavia, Java.

The party was composed of Oscar Erickson, chief officer; William Reed, econd officer; Owen McGee, first asand George Strub, Neros Hernandez, A. Gonzales, Jose Bernal and F. Fernandez, members of the engine crew. McGee is the only San Franciscan and formerly lived at 357 Thirtieth street. The other officers are from San Pedro and San Diego.

According to an interview with Reed in a San Francisco newspaper the Maverick was supposed to go to Socorro island March 18, and connect up off the coast of Lower California with the schooner Annie Larsen, which the school of the steamer a lieved a gambling game had been runcargo of arms and supplies. The ning, they could not find either cards, Maverick was then to proceed to Batavia and await further orders.

Unfortunately for the plans, the An-nie Larsen ran into a flat calm, later conducted, Kellett and his men had to owed by a severe blow. The Maverick, after cruising about 12 days searching for the schooner, decided to head for Batavia, stopping at Hilo on the way.
